

I urge you to protect the diversity of news reporting and commentary by maintaining the ban on cross-media ownership that is currently law. If you remove that ban the American public will become the pawns of a few large media corporations and will have to turn to foreign news services to get the truth in reporting that only comes as a result of many owners, representing many different points of view. Many Americans are already feeling as though the news is being reported from one point of view and have turned to foreign news services for the details that are withheld from American broadcasts. If you allow cross-media ownership in a receiving area, this single viewpoint situation can only become worse. Don't sell out on the American public.
